(14c)The act or an instance of a person's deliberately making material false or misleading statements while under oath; esp., the willful utterance of untruthful testimony under oath or affirmation, before a competent tribunal, on a point material to the adjudication. — Also termed false swearing; false oath; falsehood; (archaically) forswearing. See FALSEHOOD. Cf. MENDACITY.

— perjuror (pər-jər-ər), n.

"Perjury by the common law, seemeth to be a wilful false oath, by one who being lawfully required to depose the truth in any judicial proceeding, swears absolutely, in a matter material to the point in question, whether he be believed or not." Edward Bullingbrooke, The Duty and Authority of Justices of the Peace and Parish Officers for Ireland 598 (rev. ed. 1788).

(bef. 12c)A false statement or other indication that is made with knowledge of its falsity; an untruthful communication intended to deceive. See FIB.

"To tell a lie is to address a false statement to another person knowing that it is false or not believing that it is true, or being reckless as to its truth or falsity. The circumstances must be such that the other person regards the statement as seriously made (not in jest, or in a game of 'let's pretend' or in the context of some form of openly acknowledged fiction, or in a context in which the addressee's interest in the matter is wholly illegitimate). Indeed, the speaker must intend the statement seriously, or at least realize that the addressee or addressees will reasonably assume that it is being made seriously." Neil MacCormick, Practical Reason in Law and Morality 69 (2008).

(1892)An outright lie of some seriousness told with no sense of hesitation or reluctance, but instead with a conviction intended to induce belief among listeners or readers. — Often erroneously termed baldfaced lie; boldface lie.

(2009)A false statement that one has already done what ought to have been done or what one intends shortly to do.

white lie.

(18c)A harmless falsehood, esp. one uttered to avoid doing harm (such as offending or embarrassing someone).
